Moreover,

the investigation shows that the driver was under the influence of alcohol. The accused man has admitted his guilt partially.

Today, at a request of the investigation, he was subjected to a preventive detention. The court has taken into consideration the investigator's argument that the perpetrator may flee from justice if remained free. In addition, the investigators have presented to the court the fact that the accused individual had been previously sentenced for road traffic rules violation and repeatedly paid fines for driving under the influence of alcohol.
