

On the International Children's Day, the officers of the Investigative Committee of Russia award the young heroes of the Fatherland

The solemn ceremony of awarding young heroes was held via video conferencing under the direction of the Chairman of the Investigative Committee of Russia Alexander Bastrykin. The Head of the Committee noted that the Investigative Committee pays a lot of attention to work with the youth. Along with fulfillment of one of the main tasks of the Investigative Committee of Russia - restoration of violated rights of the minors, their protection from criminal encroachments and prevention of crimes against children, the officers of the Investigative Committee of Russia help and support children who find themselves in a difficult life situation. Within the framework of the educational system of the Committee, fundamental foundations and values are laid for children who are at the same time provided with all necessary conditions for their education and comfort living. Alexander Bastrykin reminded that children need our participation, communication and care. Restoration of violated rights of orphans, children with disabilities, children from disadvantaged families - all this is the daily work of the employees of the Investigative Committee under the motto "No child is someone else's!" After all, children are the most unprotected citizens who are subject to the destructive influences of the outside world, suffer from negative information, from indifference and irresponsibility of adults.

"Unfortunately, we cannot avoid losses. Our young heroes are always with us, we remember them", Alexander Bastrykin underlined.

The head of the Educational Outreach Department of the Investigative Committee of Russia, Hero of Russia Sergey Petrov named the young heroes who showed courage, dedication and bravery, giving their lives to save the life of another person.
