According to investigators, in the afternoon on September 6 this year, two 10-year-old girls, returning home from school, noticed a man with sunflower seeds in his hands at a public transport stop. They asked for them to feed a pigeon. The defendant, who was intoxicated, offered the schoolgirls to buy sweets for them at the store and food for the bird, and the girls went with him. After buying alcohol for himself and the promised goods for the girls, the man persuaded the girls to visit him. In the abandoned building where the man temporary lived, the accused, after drinking alcohol, committed violent sexual offenses against the girls. The accused will be subjected to a complex psychological and psychiatric examination. Also, the preliminary investigation will analyse the causes and conditions that facilitated committing of the severe offense against children. The conditions under which the victims were raised are being investigated, and the actions of their parents will be legally assessed.
