
The Chairman of the Investigative Committee of Russia noted the professionalism of investigators and police officers who promptly solved the murder of a child in the Vologda Region

Chairman of the Investigative Committee of Russia Alexander Bastrykin highly commended the joint work of investigators and police operatives in the Vologda region, who managed in the shortest possible time to identify and detain a woman suspected of murder of a 9-year-old girl.

Alexander Ivanovich Bastrykin noted the effective investigation and operational-search activities of the departments of the Investigative Department of the Investigative Committee of Russia - Forensics, the first department for the investigation of particularly important cases (on crimes against persons and public safety), the investigative department of Vologda and departments of the Interior Ministry of Russia in the Vologda region and thanked them for their service.

The Chairman of the Investigative Committee of Russia instructed to encourage all employees of the Investigative Committee and the police, whose efforts promptly managed to solve this particularly grave crime.

At present the investigators of the Vologda Regional Investigative Department of the Investigative Committee of Russia continue investigation of the murder of a child. As part of the preliminary investigation, exhaustive measures are taken to establish all the circumstances and causes of what happened. Investigators also opened a criminal case on negligent actions of officials of the prevention system, which, according to investigators, did not identify the dangerous situation of minors in the family (Part 2 of Article 293 of the Criminal Code). In addition, the investigation opened a criminal case under Article 125 of the Criminal Code against the mother of the injured girl, who did not pay due attention to her child.
