
Laying the blame at wrong door

We rarely respond to numerous accusations of Russia thrown by representatives of Ukrainian authorities, but when representative of the Ukrainian Presidential Administration Andrey Lysenko says that Russia is allegedly “plotting a provocation of international scale”, the response suggests itself.

By experience of investigative work, if a criminal admits the crime, recalls the details of the crime, though still keeping on blaming it on the victims, it means that sooner or later they will admit their guilt too. But the dreams of Kiev Nazis and organizers of genocide in Donbass, that they will be judged in the so comfortable for them Hague, are vain. They will be judged in Odessa, towns in Donbass and sobered-up Kiev too.
